Foster's Grille to open 8-10 neighborhood-style grills

Through strategic demographic research, Foster's Grille, a casual neighborhood-style grill franchise famed for its mouthwatering "2-big-for-2-hands" half-pound "Charburger" and fresh hand-cut fries, has determined the Orlando area and Osceola County to be key in the franchise's development.

"Osceola County is the perfect community for Foster Grille's expansion," Tom Palazzo, Foster's vice president of franchise development, said. "We look forward to becoming ingrained in the community by feeding the local appetites with the same exceptional menu, outstanding service, and team spirit that makes our brand successful in other markets around the country."

When former executive chef Shawn Foster opened his first Foster's Grille in Manassas, Va., nine years ago, word quickly spread among locals that the new neighborhood grille cooked up the tastiest charburgers, fresh hand-cut French fries and thickest milkshakes in town, along with fostering an enjoyable, energetic atmosphere that couldn't be topped. The local love affair spurred growth, as dedicated customers started inquiring about opening Foster's Grille locations in their own hometowns.
